What Can The Church Say?

Politics and Religion in Contemporary Australia

Andrew Murray

The first years of the third millennium have seen politics and religion both enmeshed and in conflict. On the global scale, the rise of religious fundamentalism both in Islam and Christianity clearly has some relationship to terrorism and to the political responses to it. In Australia, there has been conflict between politicians and church leaders over issues such as the treatment of asylum seekers, war in Iraq and the nature of terrorism. The purpose of this book is to raise questions about the relationship of politics and religion and to ask how the church might engage in public discussion of issues that are called political.

Andrew Murray is a Catholic priest in the congregation of the Marist Fathers and senior lecturer in philosophy at Catholic Institute of Sydney.

ISBN 1 876295 92 9     104 pages

$19.95

ORDER FORM

Please supply me with ……………………...copies of What Can the Church Say?

☐ Cheque enclosed (made out to St Paul's Publications)

Please charge: Bankcard ____Mastercard ____Visa ______

Name on Card_________________________Card No_________________________Expiry_____

Name ____________________________________________________________________________

Address __________________________________________________________________________

State _______ Post Code _______ Phone _____________ Fax _____________

Email __________________________________________________________Signature ___________________

Mail to: St Paul’s Publications, P.O. Box 906, Strathfield NSW 2135.
Fax to: (02) 9746 1140.